Bigbee with small bird

Like his art, Brett Bigbee's life is a study in classical discipline: Working long hours in his studio on Munjoy Hill, he completes only one to two paintings a year, but those paintings are museum quality. Bigbee's work calls to mind a strange mix of painters and painting schools, from Van Eyck to De Kooning, from the Northern Renaissance painters to early American folk artists. For more details of this "Artist with Bird," see page 21.

City upholds waterfront ban

For the second time in a month, the City Council beat back an attempt to allow non-marine uses on Portland's waterfront.

In a 5-4 vote on July 6, Councilor Ted Rand's proposal to relax waterfront zoning rules was tabled. Rand wanted to allow non-marine uses in upper-story space on the waterfront, reversing the marine-only zoning adopted by voters in a referendum five years ago.

Opponents argued that it would derail the work done by the Waterfront Alliance, which had built a consensus of fishermen, merchants and activists opposed to runaway development. The alliance's plan for revised zoning has gone to the city for study, public comment and a vote by the City Council on Oct. 5.

Councilor Tom Allen, who missed the initial 4-4 vote June 15 on Rand's proposal, said he "didn't want to undermine the work of the alliance" and stressed that consensus was the key to "how we govern ourselves in the '90s."

"Our political process accentuates differences among special interest groups. I say we take those people who disagree and give them responsibility for coming up with solutions."

Such a strategy was not a cop-out by elected officials, Allen said. "Ultimately we'll have to vote. But hopefully by then we'll have succeeded in narrowing differences. We'll also make people feel like they own the result."

Shawn Michaud, in a photo taken last December at his father's home in Bangor. "My son only had 17 years, 6 months and 3 days," said his father. "Some were good. Some were real bad."

Juvenile injustice

Gov. McKernan's "new" plan to cut costs at the Maine Youth Center is the same old Medicaid shell game. It's likely to cost taxpayers more money — and just might cost the lives of more boys like Shawn Michaud.

■ By Bob Young

On the morning of Saturday, June 6, Shawn Michaud ran along the weedy banks of Long Creek until the stream entered a culvert. Rainwater overflowing from Clark's Pond gushed through it.

Shawn stopped at the water's edge. Behind him was the Maine Youth Center, from which he had just escaped. Ahead lay freedom — freedom from the juvenile justice system, freedom from the painful childhood from which Shawn had spent most of his 17 years running.

Between the two stood the culvert, surging with storm water. Shawn planned to use the concrete underpass to avoid South Portland's busy Westbrook Street so that his escape would not be noticed.

Shawn waded into the grey tomb-like structure. The water rushed against him, pulling at the armpits of his dark green Army fatigue jacket. The echo of the raging stream drowned out whatever he may have said before Shawn slipped beneath the surface of his own River Styx.

Two days later, Shawn Michaud's body was found about a mile downstream.

Shawn thought he was outsmarting the system by going through the culvert. Maine's troubled juvenile justice system had already considered his escape route — but hadn't bothered to do anything about it. Two years earlier, a task force appointed by Gov. McKernan had recommended installing grates on the culvert to reduce escapes.

But the state couldn't find the money for the task force's main recommendations for the youth center — extra staff — much less the grates. Instead, McKernan cut the youth center's staff. And when his recent bid to privatize the youth center failed, he cut it again.

McKernan's "savings" have stretched the Maine Youth Center to the breaking point — and those shortsighted cuts are bound to cost Mainers far more in the long run.

Newsbriefs Weekly

A review of the top news stories affecting Greater Portland: July 1 through 8, 1992.

Portland made its first pitch for minor league baseball. The City Council voted 8-1 on a resolution showing support for Daniel Burke's stab at bringing Double-A ball to Hadlock Field. The council faces a tougher call in about six weeks when it must commit to expanding the stadium from 1,200 to 6,000 seats.

Peaks Island will get a new passenger ferry terminal thanks to a $1.25 million federal grant made possible by the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act — commonly referred to as "ISE TEA." The act was passed by Congress last year to encourage non-highway transportation. The state has already pledged $1.9 million to rebuild the island's car ferry terminal.

The state's newest museum opens at Portland Head Light when the keeper's quarters at the lighthouse are unveiled to the public July 13. Mainly through photographs, the museum will display the history of Maine's most photographed lighthouse, built in 1791. Visitors will be allowed inside the keeper's quarters but the automated lighthouse will remain off-limits.

New England Telephone wants to increase its charges for basic residential services by $2.96 a month. The company has asked the state to approve a plan that would hike the average basic residential service from $11.89 to $14.85 a month. The company said it would reduce the rates for some in-state long-distance calls at the same time, producing a total increase of $1.60 a month for the average residential customer.

Pro-choice activists vowed to bring a bill to the Maine state legislature to safeguard a woman's right to abortion. At a rally in Portland on July 2, pro-choice activists said they aim to repeal the state's law requiring a 48-hour wait before a woman can have an abortion. The law has been blocked by a court order. But anti-abortionists are trying to overturn the order.

Maine's first off-track betting parlor seems a sure bet following a vote of confidence from the Waterville city council. All that stands in the way of beaming races from Scarborough Downs onto TV monitors at John Martin's Manor Restaurant is a vote by the Maine State Harness Racing Commission. Advocates of off-track betting view that as a formality. The facility could be up and running by July 16, said restaurant owner Peter Martin.

Contracts covering state employees expired July 1. Turbulent negotiations are expected. The state wants workers to take more furlough days and make other concessions. State law forbids the 13,000 workers from striking.

"It is time to take back our freedom," said Jonathan Carter, Green Party candidate in Maine's 2nd Congressional District, to a crowd of more than 130 protestors gathered in Skowhegan for the sixth week in a row to express outrage at the May 16 fatal shooting near Jackman of Kathy Hegarty by two Somerset County sheriff's deputies and one Maine State Trooper. "We must make sure our police do not act with reckless abandon," said Carter. "They are not the judge, the jury and the executioner."

An insider welfare scam is being investigated by state officials, who are looking into a supposed scam in which about $49,000 in welfare money was allegedly stolen by state employees who had the payments sent to phony clients.

No charges have yet been filed, and officials declined to identify two suspects in the case.

But the head of investigations for Maine's attorney general, Brian MacMaster, said July 1 "we know who they are" and that authorities hope to present their findings to a grand jury next month.

MacMaster said investigators believe one suspect, who worked for the Department of Human Services, created computer files for at least five fictitious welfare clients.

S.D. Warren fined for causing stink

S.D. Warren Co. has paid a $725,000 fine to settle air pollution complaints over a five-year period. The fine is the largest air pollution penalty in state history.

The fine stems from S.D. Warren's excessive releases of "TRS," or "totally reduced sulphur," which often smell like rotten eggs. The Westbrook paper manufacturer also emitted smoke that exceeded density standards and failed to operate continuous emission monitors as required.

The amount of the fine was based on the plant's repeated violations of emission standards from 1986 to 1991, according to Assistant Attorney General Dennis Harnish.

The fine doesn't guarantee the plant will start smelling any better. A company official said the plant's financial situation hampers its ability to make more improvements in its emission practices.

The company's $725,000 check is headed for the state's general fund, pending the final approval of the fine by the state Board of Environmental Protection.

Maine Med opens AIDS Clinic

Maine Medical Center's AIDS Consultation Clinic will see its first patients on July 10.

"It's taken quite a while, but I like what they're doing," said Sandy Titus, support services coordinator at the The AIDS Project in Portland.

Staffed by a physician, a nurse and a social worker, the clinic will serve patients who have been referred by their private doctors and from the Medical Center's outpatient clinics. The staff will also conduct education efforts throughout the state and be available for consultation to health-care providers.

It's a far cry from the larger AIDS resource center activists have been demanding at the Medical Center, but Titus likes the idea of the clinic offering consultation to patients' primary care doctors. That way care is "decentralized" and knowledge of the disease broadened, she said.

"We need to spread the care because the epidemic is so wide. One physician can't do it all," Titus said.

Jim Wise of ACT UP/Portland, which has been demanding an AIDS resource center for two years, declined to comment until he knew more about the clinic.

Public Broadcasting Corp. is not going as smoothly as planned.

A union representing more than 20 employees of the defunct MPBN filed a grievance claiming the employees are entitled to a $500,000 severance package.

Union representative Rolf Tallberg said that when MPBN ceased to exist, its employees effectively had been laid off and were due severance pay according to their tenure in the University of Maine system, where MPBN was based.

"Our beef basically is that there is a contract in effect now that is not being honored," Tallberg said. "This thing went way too fast... We warned them. Now it's a mess."

Saco Island bought cheap

A group of local investors bought five mill buildings, six waterfront acres and a parking lot on Saco Island for $110,000 at an auction on June 30.

The property, assessed at $7.4 million, had been owned by Scarborough developer Gavin Ruotolo, who planned a $50 million complex with offices, condominiums and a hotel. He lost the property after defaulting on a bank loan in 1990.

Cutts Island Group, which bought the property, is made up of seven investors from southern Maine. The group plans to develop a retail and government center, as well as a public park, according to Barry Hobbins, a Saco attorney who is one of the investors.

"We have a sense of (the city's) history and pride," said Hobbins, a former state representative whose grandfather worked in the Saco Island mills, "and we're not going to cut corners."

The property is also a potential site for a passenger train station in a proposed Boston-Portland railway line. Hobbins said the group favors a train station.

"Jobs bond" projects OK'd

Maine voters found out what they voted for in the "jobs bond" referendum when $28 million worth of approved projects were announced on July 2.

Locally, Scarborough hit the jackpot with a $750,000 award to build a new town hall and town center project. The next biggest winner was Freeport, which received $421,000 to repair its public

United Way supports Boy Scouts, anti-gay bias

The Greater Portland United Way has again given money to the Boy Scouts, despite the scouts' discrimination practices.

On July 1, the United Way announced it was giving $77,000 to the Pine Tree Council, southern Maine's chapter of Boy Scouts of America. The money is for the fiscal year running from July 1 to June 30, 1992. The award was made even though the scouts' refused to let a Portland woman become a den mother for her son's Cub Scouts troop because she's lesbian.

Last fall, officials of the Munjoy Hill Cub Scout pack that third-grader Nick Westervelt had joined told his mother Terry that she wouldn't be able to serve as a den mother. The Boy Scouts of America — the pack's parent organization — didn't allow homosexuals in "leadership" positions, they explained.

Since then, some United Way donors have protested by stopping payroll deductions to the United Way, according to United Way Agency Relations Director Joanne Crapeau.

"The Boy Scouts' policy is anti-family. The United Way needs to take the initiative because others will notice and follow. It's a great opportunity for the United Way to take a leadership role," said Rita Kissen, a member of Portland's chapter of Parents & Friends of Lesbians & Gays (PFLAG).

The United Way is reviewing the anti-discrimination policy it applies to agencies to which it gives money, said Crapeau. But it doesn't expect to enact a new or revised policy until Dec. 31, 1992.

The United Way's current anti-discrimination policy does not prohibit its award recipients from discriminating against gays or lesbians. It was last revised in 1984.

The United Way didn't take an immediate stand against the Boy Scouts' discriminatory policies because "we want to make sure we don't rush to judgment," Crapeau said. "We're interested in community education as much as anything and hope to take this opportunity to get the gay community and Boy Scouts to sit down together."

"It's just taking longer than I had expected," said Terry, who does not use a second name. "Six months ago I would have been upset, but I think (this could lead to) a positive change."

Kissen said she'd like to see the United Way move faster. "I think the United Way should have stopped giving them money yesterday. But... I'm willing to give them time in the hope they will make a good decision," Kissen said.

Estuary Project gives "minigrants"

A Bonny Eagle High School student will develop a slide show and brochures on pollution in Sebago Lake, Freeport will now be able to identify sources of pollution that close shellfish beds, and Cumberland will have a volunteer water quality sampling program as part of the $55,589 in "minigrants" given by the Casco Bay Estuary Project in June.

The project, which is a partnership with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the state, is funding the projects to research water quality problems and to raise public awareness about Casco Bay.

The Casco Bay Estuary Project, which was started in 1990, is also working on a comprehensive conservation plan for the bay, which is due to be released in September of 1995.

But public awareness about the bay is difficult to raise, according to Bob Moore, public outreach coordinator at the Estuary Project. "It still looks pretty on a blue summer day," he said. "It's tough to say 'we've got a crisis.'"

Casco Bay is showing signs of stress, Moore said. Stormwater overflow and leakage from septic tanks cause pollutants and bacteria to enter the bay. A number of clam beds are closed due to the pollution, he said.

Here is the complete list of minigrants:
Brunswick: $4,500 to produce a manual explaining Brunswick's Coastal Protection Ordinance.
Cape Elizabeth: $1,500 to provide educational signs for the greenway system.

Cumberland: $1,398 for a water-quality sampling program.
Durham: $3,750 to study the Runaround Pond watershed.
Falmouth: $10,000 to provide assistance for the Watershed Management Plan.

Freeport: $5,550 to identify sources of pollution causing closure of shellfish beds.
Harpwell: $4,500 to locate sources of pollution that have closed two shellfish beds.

Naples: $10,000 to study the Crooked River aquifer.
South Portland: $6,166 to study the efficiency of Clark's, Calvary and Barberry ponds in the treatment of stormwater.

Maine Trail Association: $2,000 to create an educational program aimed at recreational boaters on Casco Bay islands.
Michael Dechaine, Bonny Eagle High School student: $325 to develop a slide show and brochures about pollution in the Sebago Lake watershed.

Portland Trails: $3,000 for public education on the importance of buffers along shoreline corridors and shoreline resources.

Presumpscot River Watch: $3,000 to expand the water-quality monitoring program.

works complex, renovate a school roof and build a ballfield. Windham collected $400,000 for fire station and library projects.

Portland got just $271,000 of the $2.5 million it sought. Portland didn't get the sidewalks it asked for, but the city did get money for sewer improvements, repair to its public safety building plaza and fireboat renovations.

South Portland was also disappointed, receiving just $252,000 — for Maine Mall Road reconstruction — of the $3.1 million in requested.

Elsewhere around Cumberland County, Falmouth's Town Hall will be accessible to handicapped people and Falmouth schools will have more administrative offices. Portland Head Light will get parking improvements, and Gorham will receive new guardrails, culverts and roofs.

The Department of Economic Development approved 245 projects in 151 communities throughout the state. Criteria for awards included job creation and the availability of matching funds from towns and cities.

The $28 million in projects is part of a $79 million bond package. The rest of the money is for transportation projects.

Money should be available to towns and cities by early August, according to Leonard Dow, director of the Office of Community Development. He said very few of the projects promised long-term job creation, with the exception of recycling programs and a proposed health clinic.

Nude referendum under wraps

Let's strip the confusion from all this talk about a referendum to ban nude dancing in Portland. It's not going to happen, at least not this year.

Organizers decided last week to postpone the petition drive they announced in May. A loose-knit group of anti-nudity crusaders (so loose-knit they never came up with a name) tried to begin gathering signatures shortly after the Portland City Council's May 5 rejection of a proposal to outlaw naked entertainment. Now they've called it off. Group spokesman Michael Schools said the referendum will have to wait until "a more opportune time."

"Support was kind of low. I don't think that politically, it was a good time to do it," said Schools.

As usual, there's more to it than that. Schools said organizers were worried the referendum to ban nude dancing would interfere with "other issues that are going on."

When pressed, Schools admitted the "other issue" was Portland's gay rights ordinance. That ordinance won City Council approval, but was blocked from taking effect by a petition drive. It'll be decided on the November ballot.

Schools and his allies, who are the same folks opposing gay rights, apparently believe a referendum on nude dancing would draw gay rights supporters from the polls.

"We don't want two things linked together, and if we do it (the nude dancing referendum) this year, that's what's going to happen," Schools said.

He said there's "no question" his group will try again next year to cover up the naughty parts.

Naked gun

Old Orchard Beach already has an ordinance that bans nude dancing in bars, but according to the town's police chief the ban covers a lot more than naked bodies. Chief Dana Kelley sent out a memo June 19 warning bar owners that even some fully clothed activities are illegal.

"It has been brought to my attention," wrote Kelley, "that when females participating in wet T-shirt contests... are wet down... the shirts they wear become translucent, in other words you can see right through them."

Kelley overcame his shock at this revelation sufficiently to point out that the nude dancing ordinance requires bar entertainers to wear "opaque material."

The chief then turned to fashion: "Concerning male and female dancers, the ordinance states that no portion of the buttocks shall be exposed. Bathing suits such as the thong type clearly expose the buttocks, and although thong bathing suits are legal in public, they are not permitted when used for entertainment purposes, and would be a violation of the nudity ordinance."

Portlanders seeking respite from modern society's obsession with skin and sex may have to wait until 1993 to vote for a nude dancing ordinance. In the meantime, they would be well advised to avoid streets and beaches this summer.

But thanks to Chief Kelley, they may find a fully clothed oasis in the nearest O.O.B. saloon.

Blinded by the light

Break out the sunglasses and autograph books. The National Association of Secretaries of State holds its annual conference in Portland August 8 through 13, and the political glitterati plan to attend.

Confirmed speakers include Jesse Jackson, Michael Dukakis and Illinois Gov. James Edgar. George Bush is listed as doubtful, but conference organizers said they're close to confirming appearances by Bill Clinton and Ross Perot. Perot's Maine campaign said a visit to the state is likely in August, but the secretaries of state affair was only one of several invitations under consideration.

Celebrity journalists lined up to take part in the event include CNN's Catherine Crier, PBS's Hodding Carter, Newsweek's Margaret Warner and author Theodore Sorenson. Talkmasters Larry King and Rush Limbaugh are possible moderators.

And don't forget Maine Secretary of State Bill Diamond, who can be expected to use his role as conference host to grab all the exposure he can get — just on the off chance he decides to run for governor in 1994.

weird news

He's back. She's back.
And so are the rabbits.

Michael Moore, who took a dark-humored look at the relationship between Flint, Mich. and General Motors in his 1989 film "Roger & Me," has made another documentary about his hometown.

The 23-minute sequel, "Pets or Meat," shows Moore returning to Flint three years after chronicling his search for then-GM Chairman Roger Smith. The title is inspired by the "Rabbit Lady," who in the first film sold rabbits for food to laid-off GM workers and other impoverished Flint residents.

In the new film, Moore explains the connection this way: "That's our life with General Motors: First we're pets, then we're meat."

Both films will air Sept. 28 on the public television series "P.O.V."

Moore said he ultimately hopes for a nationwide call-in show after the airing so Americans "can tell stories about living in the Depression of 1992."

A California woman wants to use ESP to persuade garbage-eating bears to stay out of Juneau, Alaska. Samantha Khury, a self-described "animal therapist," didn't meet any bears during a recent four-day visit to Juneau. But she did talk with her voice — to locals about the bear problem.

Last summer 15 bears attracted by garbage were shot and killed in Juneau as threats to public safety. Another six were hit by vehicles.

More than 100 people attended Khury's lecture in Juneau on interspecies communication. Khury said she communicates telepathically with animals through images and said she could teach residents to do the same so they could discourage bears from entering town.

"I'm a little foggy about what she could do about the problem," said state Department of Fish and Game biologist Matt Robus. "Our problem is a garbage problem, not a bear problem. The human animal is the problem animal in this case."

JUVENILE INJUSTICE

Shawn Michaud was first committed to the youth center at the age of 12. He had been convicted of stealing cigarettes, beer and lottery tickets from a store on Mount Desert Island. It was his first offense.

The state could have kept Shawn at home on Mount Desert Island, where he could have received counseling and would have been supervised by a local probation officer. Instead, a judge sent him 160 miles away to Maine's only juvenile corrections facility in South Portland.

During his seventh and final stay at the youth center — which lasted 11 days — Shawn was assigned to Cottage 3. The youth center's "cottages" are not the small houses that the word implies. They're large Victorian brick buildings that house up to 40 juveniles.

Some of the cottages can be seen from Interstate 295. The youth center sits on a hill just south of the Jetport, near the head of the Fore River. The 300-acre minimum security facility was established as Maine's Reform School in 1853. It's been a temporary home for troubled juveniles ever since.

The youth center's residents range from 11 to 21 in age, though most are between 15 and 17 years old. There are usually about 250 residents at the youth center, including 25 to 30 girls. All have been sent to the center by the courts for committing crimes which range from stealing a pack of cigarettes to murder.

Cottage doors are usually not locked during daylight hours. But residents must have permission to leave their cottages. And residents considered likely to escape can only leave their cottages with peer or staff escorts.

The center currently has a staff of 215. Half of those are counselors, who are responsible for providing both counseling and security, since the youth center has no separate security force.

The center's mission is to rehabilitate, not punish juveniles. Its efforts include education, group therapy, individual counseling, nursing, vocational training and even religion.

When juveniles enter the youth center they're assessed and assigned a certain number of credits they must earn in order to leave. They earn credits for the effort they make in their treatment programs, for work they do at the center, and for attending the center's fully accredited school. The average stay at the youth center is six months.

The center's main goal, according to Superintendent Dick Wyse, is to teach kids to be responsible and learn the consequences of impetuous acts like escaping, which lengthen their stays.

Because of this emphasis on building responsibility and trust, Wyse is not keen on having a fence around the youth center. He'd much rather have more staff.

"I want relationships, understanding and the ability to read kids. That's what stops (escapes). I'm interested in changing kids, rehabilitating them, not confining them."

Wyse said the center's decline in escapes — from 354 in 1987 to 128 in 1991 — is evidence that his theory is working.

Obviously, Wyse's rehabilitation theory didn't work with Shawn Michaud.

And it's going to be increasingly difficult to make the theory work as the youth center staff dwindles under McKernan's budget cuts.

Low morale, high anxiety

The day after Shawn's body was found, the union representing youth center counselors held a press conference. The union wanted to call attention to the low morale and high anxiety created by the uncertainty of McKernan's plans for the youth center.

The uncertainty had been hanging over the youth center since McKernan went to the Legislature in January 1992 and said he wanted to cut $2 million from its $10 million budget.

McKernan told the Legislature that he could make up the $2 million shortfall by privatizing the youth center. His plan hinged on capturing $2 million in federal Medicaid funds, which are commonly used to pay for juveniles in private treatment programs or in foster care. His proposal was a straight swap: $2 million in state money for $2 million in federal money. Let federal taxpayers foot the bill for Maine's incarcerated juveniles, went the logic of McKernan's shell game. (See "Anatomy of a flawed plan," page 10.)

But one week before the cut was supposed to take effect, McKernan's game went bust, when the federal government

McKernan's bid to privatize the youth center was plagued from the start

Anatomy of a flawed plan

Anyone who believes that government doesn't work need only look at Gov. McKernan's plan to privatize the Maine Youth Center to understand why. The plan to privatize the Maine Youth Center was clearly McKernan's. It was also part of his larger plan to privatize state government.

But McKernan's bid to privatize the youth center was plagued by problems from the start. The plan quickly fell behind schedule. The administration's consultant was wrong in saying that the state could capture Medicaid money for the youth center. And key players in state agencies weren't working as a team.

The plan surfaced on paper in a Nov. 5, 1991 memo by Department of Corrections Commissioner Don Allen. Allen wrote that he had met with McKernan, who "suggested that some areas of state government be considered for privatization — the Maine Youth Center being one of those."

On Jan. 27, 1992, State Planning Office Director Rich Silkman distributed a "privatization workplan" to heads of the state's major departments. According to Silkman, "privatization efforts (were) proceeding along a number of different fronts" including mental health and mental retardation services, corrections, the Turnpike Authority and the Department of Transportation, the Bureau of Taxation and "internal operations of state government."

All the different plans had timetables for achieving privatization. Silkman's timetable for privatizing the youth center called for Requests for Proposals (RFP) to go out March 1, the contracts to be reviewed May 1, and for a contract to be signed by July 1.

But the administration had trouble coordinating its efforts and assigning responsibilities. The plan sat in limbo until April 17, when Judith Friedlaender, a consultant hired by Silkman for $10,000, issued a report that said the state could get up to $1.9 million a year in Medicaid funds by hiring a contractor to run the youth center.

The next day, Director of the state's Bureau of Medicaid Services Elaine Fuller wrote a memo complaining that Silkman "has not contacted anyone in this bureau."

"I do not understand how

McKernan's top planner wrote that "privatization efforts (were) proceeding along a number of different fronts" including mental health and mental retardation services, corrections, the Turnpike Authority and the Department of Transportation, the Bureau of Taxation and "internal operations of state government."

an RFP can be done without having the policy for Medicaid coverage as a part of that RFP," Fuller added. "Please do not expect us to be pulled in at the last minute, and then have to pick up the pieces. Medicaid is much too complex a program to have anyone going ahead without our participation."

On April 24, Department of Human Services Deputy Commissioner Doug Porter finally asked Fuller to get quick advice from the federal government on the availability of Medicaid for the youth center.

On May 6, Fuller wrote the Medicaid regional office in Boston. On June 23 — one week before McKernan's $2 million cut in the youth center budget took effect, and one week before the state was supposed to have a signed contract with a privateer to run the center — the state finally got an official reply from the federal government.

Director of Medicaid Christine Nye wrote to reiterate that federal regulations prohibited Medicaid payments "for inmates of public institutions."

Nye concluded that "merely contracting with a private entity for various services, while the state retains ownership and control of the physical plant will not be sufficient to permit payment."

Nye's ruling meant that McKernan's plan never had a chance.

And if someone in the McKernan administration had contacted Nye sooner, all the uncertainty and sagging morale that the plan created among youth center staff could have been avoided.

Bob Young

JUVENILE INJUSTICE

ruled that Maine couldn't get Medicaid money for merely privatizing the youth center. Regulations prohibited Medicaid money from going to "inmates of a public institution" — even if it were run by a private company.

McKernan unveiled a new plan on June 29, which also relies on Medicaid money. This time, the plan calls for capturing $1.1 million in Medicaid by moving 18 juveniles into private homes, modifying probation operations to make them eligible for a special Medicaid program, and creating a privatized "tracking" program to supervise youth center residents who have moved into community homes. (See "Medicaid money still in doubt," page 12.)

McKernan's plan would make up the rest of the youth center budget shortfall by keeping 26 vacant staff positions unfilled and by laying off seven more youth center employees.

The staffing cuts mean that youth center personnel — who already have been forced to take up to 30 furlough days this year and have had their workweeks reduced from 42 to 39 hours — won't be able to give many kids the help they need.

"Our success is directly proportionate to the amount of time we spend with a kid," said Nancy Cochrane, who runs the cottage for juveniles nearing release. "The bottom line is manpower, manpower, manpower. Without it, you're asking the impossible and expecting miracles. We should have six counselors, but we've got three vacant, frozen positions."

Because of the reduction in staffing, Cochrane and Barbara Rich, a social worker who helps Cochrane, figure they'll spend adequate time with only 10 of the 35 juveniles in their care.

"There's a softness to these kids now. But there is a point of no return for them," said Cochrane. "They're breaking into cars now, but send them to Thomaston and later they might be breaking into your house with a gun or throwing you through a window at DeNan's."

"If the public wants to salvage kids, there is a cost. If you don't give a damn, fine," continued Cochrane.

"But God help you in a dark alley."

The price of neglect

McKernan's youth center cuts might — or might not — save the state a few dollars this year.

But the cuts are another shell game. Mainers will pay for the state's neglected juveniles in other ways — through higher insurance rates, through the prison system and through the welfare rolls.

"Portland is like a magnet for escapees. And to survive on the streets, they've got to steal."

The perfect example is the kid we just arrested for breaking into 40 cars."

Portland Police Chief Michael Chitwood

■ "Portland is like a magnet for escapees. And to survive on the streets, they've got to steal," according to Portland Police Chief Mike Chitwood. "The perfect example is the kid we just arrested for breaking into 40 cars."

On June 17, Portland police arrested a 17-year-old youth center escapee, whom they suspected of committing 40 break-ins in the 10 days he was loose.

In 1991, there were 1,571 reported car break-ins and 246 cars stolen in Portland, according to Portland police. Theft and vandalism insurance rates are more than 20 percent higher for Portland-area motorists than they are for motorists from other parts of Maine. (A resident of Portland, for example, will pay $50 a year more to ensure a 1990 Volvo than will a resident of York.) Owners of vandalized cars also pay for damages that fall below their deductible limits.

■ In September 1991, Roger Smith was sentenced to 70 years in jail for the murder of a cellmate at Thomaston State Prison. Smith arrived at the Maine Youth Center when he was 17. "He was damaged goods, with deep-seated emotional problems," said Nancy Cochrane. But when he reached the age of 18, he could no longer stay at the youth center.

Smith needed intensive psychiatric care. But Augusta Mental Health Institute wouldn't take him. His parents wouldn't take him. And according to Cochrane, a community home that tried to take him "couldn't deal with him."

Smith lived on the streets of Portland until an assault

McKernan's new plan in doubt

After striking out in his bid to privatize the Maine Youth Center, Gov. McKernan unveiled a new plan on June 29. This time, McKernan hit a foul ball at best, according to critics.

It calls for more layoffs. He still has no written assurances that the state will get Medicaid. And the plan runs counter to McKernan's original plan not to reduce services at the center.

The governor's new plan would make up half of a $2 million shortfall in the youth center by keeping 26 vacant positions unfilled and laying off seven more employees.

It would capture the other $1 million in Medicaid by moving 18 juveniles into private homes, modifying probation operations so they are eligible for a special Medicaid program, and creating a privatized "tracking" program to supervise youth center residents who have moved into community programs.

Critics blasted the plan for making up the $2 million shortfall with staff reductions. The staff reductions run counter to McKernan's original vow to compensate for the entire budget cut with Medicaid funds.

"Essentially, (McKernan) has balanced the state budget by cutting services and staffing at the Maine Youth Center," said Ned Chester, a Portland defense attorney.

"It's criminal to remove one single person from the youth center staff. The youth center has been chipped away at enough," said Kathi Fields, a juvenile advocate.

The staff reductions can only undermine the quality of service and rehabilitation at the youth center, said State Rep. Cush

Anthony, a leader of the Coalition for Juvenile Corrections, which was formed to fight McKernan's privatization plans.

Anthony said the coalition will ask McKernan to restore $2 million to the youth center budget.

The coalition also doubts that McKernan's new plan can capture Medicaid funds.

"He still has no written assurances. I think (McKernan) is being overly optimistic. It looks iffy to me," Anthony said.

Coalition members were also skeptical about the remaining elements of the plan:

■ They doubted that the overworked probation and parole system can handle the additional work for which the plan calls.

■ They questioned the availability of beds in community homes and whether they would be appropriate for juvenile offenders.

■ They criticized McKernan for contracting out the "tracking" system, while laying off state workers.

Finally, the plan was panned for lacking any long-term vision for the youth center and juvenile corrections.

"What plan? What I see is Medicaid, Medicaid, Medicaid," said Portland police Det. Judy Ridge, who works with juvenile habitual offenders. "I still don't see a plan."

"Where are they putting the kids when the state is closing facilities left and right? Who's getting released? How can probation (officers), who already have a 60-to-1 caseload, handle more work?" asked Ridge. "I don't see any nuts and bolts."

JUVENILE INJUSTICE

conviction landed him in Thomaston.

It cost the state $22,000 to imprison Smith during 1991. Even if that rate does not increase, it will cost Maine taxpayers $1.4 million to keep Smith in jail for the next 70 years.

"In addition, he takes up a bed each year, reducing our capacity by one, which has an effect on other sentences," said Department of Corrections Associate Commissioner A.L. Carlisle.

"Although we knew what he needed, the state didn't have the resources," said Cochrane. "Because we couldn't deal with him early. We'll have to deal with him later."

■ "Mike" is 17. (State law forbids using the real name of juvenile offenders without the written permission of their parents and state guardians, so "Mike" is not his real name.)

He has bounced in and out of the youth center for the last four years. His father is in jail. His mother doesn't want him. He's sleeping on the streets of Portland.

Mike's 16-year-old girlfriend is pregnant. He doesn't have any job skills. He wants to be a professional musician. It's not hard to imagine that Mike will soon be collecting unemployment and that his child's mother will be receiving welfare and food stamps.

Annual cost to taxpayers of Mike's unemployment: a maximum of $10,296 a year. Annual cost of welfare and food stamps for Mike, his child, and his child's mother: $7,864.

What Mike really needs "is to go back to the age of 3 and be re-programmed," said Cochrane. "Instead, he goes back to a dysfunctional family. He goes from total structure to no structure. There's no halfway house for his re-entry (to society). Instead we send them out cold... They screw up. People point to the youth center and say we failed."

Breaking the cycle: what works

Roger, Mike and Shawn all had one thing in common besides the youth center. They came from troubled families. Cochrane and Rich claim they could rehabilitate these troubled kids — as they did with "Jack" — if they had enough resources.

When Jack was 11, the state took him from his mother, who had 17 kids. Over the next six years, Jack ran away from foster homes eight times and escaped from the youth center six times. Finally he ended up with Cochrane and Rich.

"When we got him he could not talk to people. He had no trust. He was antisocial," said Rich. "But he began intensive one-on-one work with a person who understood what it is to be abused."

At first, the only way Jack could communicate with Rich was by writing lyrics to heavy metal songs. She'd decode the lyrics and discuss them with Jack.

"These kids have always wanted someone to ask about their feelings, to talk to. And once they trust one person, that becomes the prototype. They're re-parented. They can trust others and have relationships," Rich said.

Jack has been in a foster home for the last 4 1/2 months. He just finished 10th grade and barely missed the honor roll, according to Rich. He has stayed straight and sober. He calls Rich every two weeks just to check in.

Jack also recently wrote a letter to Rich, thanking her, because "No one else really ever spent so much time with me, or always wanted to hear what I had to say... I will miss going up to your office every day. But just think, someday I will call you up and have you come down to my office & we can jam to Guns-n-Roses together."

"It kills us that we can't do it with everybody," said Cochrane.

And the fact that the youth center doesn't have the resources to help its residents was part of what killed Shawn Michaud.

When Shawn was first committed to the youth center in 1986 his parents had recently separated. His father had moved to Indiana. In 1988 the state's Department of Human Services assumed custody of Shawn, ruling that his mother was negligent.

After his initial stint at the youth center, the state placed Shawn in a foster home. He ran away. The state placed him in another. He ran away four more times. Each time the state sent him back to the youth center. He ran away from the South Portland facility three times before his final, fateful escape. "All he ever did was run for his freedom," said Shawn's father, Linden Buzzell III. "But stop before you blame Shawn. He asked for help and didn't get it."

"Blame me for not being the father I should have been," said Buzzell, who suffered a nervous breakdown after Shawn's death. "Blame the Department of Human Services. They had him from the age of 12 and did not help him. Blame his probation officer who didn't give a damn. We're all to blame, some more than others."

But Buzzell can't understand why McKernan — who can prevent such tragedies from occurring again — continues to cut the youth center budget.

"I can't believe it, especially after a boy died," Buzzell said. "Doesn't he have any compassion for the kids?"

"The best thing McKernan could do right now is sit at his desk and write a letter of resignation."

Governor McKernan: the human cannonball of Maine politics?

Jocko and his mean-eyed clowns

To those who have long suspected that the Blaine House is being run by a bunch of clowns, it will come as no surprise that the high-priced consultant who wrongly advised Gov. John R. "Jock" McKernan to "privatize" the Maine Youth Center had previously been employed directing a real-life circus.

Jocko the Clown's decision to toss $10,000 of taxpayers' money to said financial acrobat would leave the peanut gallery in stitches — were it not for the fact that one wide-eyed boy lies dead while McKernan's parade of mean-eyed clowns marches on.

The governor's ill-conceived bid to sell out the Maine Youth Center has failed. But documents recently unearthed by the Coalition for Juvenile Corrections demonstrate just how desperate and self-serving McKernan's plan to "privatize" state government really is. And in the case of the Maine Youth Center, McKernan's actions suggest that he is more intent on salvaging his own career than redeeming the lives of kids like Shawn Michaud. (See cover story.)

The privatization bandwagon got rolling in the fall of 1990, when candidate McKernan repeatedly lied to the voters of Maine by insisting there would not be a budget shortfall. Only a few days after he won the election, a sad-faced Jocko admitted that the state was indeed $110 million in the hole (as opponent Joe Brennan had predicted).

In an attempt to redeem himself during the next budget cycle, McKernan borrowed a nifty sounding phrase from Massachusetts ringmaster William Weld, and promised that through the wonders of "privatization" he would balance the next budget without cutting services.

Then he turned around and ordered his aides to sell off every state operation that wasn't nailed down. State Planner Richard Silkman prepared to hold a fire sale featuring portions of the state's major mental health and mental retardation services, the corrections system, the Maine Turnpike Authority, the Department of Transportation, the Bureau of Taxation and other internal operations.

Silkman didn't need a crystal ball to see that the people running those operations wouldn't help with the heave-ho. So Silkman hired jugglers from outside the Big Top to do the dirty work. Those running the departments being axed were not only left out of the planning process — many were forced to read about plans for their demise in the newspaper.

Among the mercenaries Silkman hired was Judith Friedlaender, who had served as managing director of the successful Big Apple Circus before moving to Maine in 1989. Friedlaender, with little to no experience with either juvenile corrections or Medicaid, was exactly the sort of youth center consultant for which McKernan was looking: one who would tell him what he wanted to hear.

Juggler Judith took the $10,000 and told McKernan that if only he would take control of the Maine Youth Center away from the people who knew how to run the place, he could give people who didn't know how to run it a wagon full of federal money, some of which they could keep as profit.

And by not having to spend state money on the youth center, McKernan could keep his Weldian budget promise and be catapulted back into Republican stardom.

But Jocko's bid to become the human cannonball of Maine politics fizzled after the Feds told him they wouldn't fall for his shell game. His troupe of advisors folded their tents, cashed their checks and moved the show to other state institutions.

So it was that Maine considered gutting the Maine Youth Center — not because anyone thought that private enterprise would do a better job at running the South Portland correctional facility, but because McKernan and Silkman were suffering from the delusion that they could get federal money to bolster their sagging careers.

Thus far, Jocko's sideshow has not been fun to watch. Kids who need help aren't getting it. Silkman is throwing around taxpayers' money as if it were confetti. And the big acts are still to come.

The youth center was the perfect sacrificial lamb on which McKernan could test his ambitions. Its small staff is too overworked to mount much of a challenge. And its clients are underage and undereducated. All in all, the kids at the Maine Youth Center were ideal targets for budgetary rape by a bunch of mean-eyed clowns.

Who will be next? Given what we've seen so far, McKernan's plans to privatize such state services as toll collecting, snow plowing, tax collecting and especially caring for the mentally ill all deserve much more scrutiny than they have received to date.

And we at CBW suggest that rather than monkeying with hard-working institutions like the Maine Youth Center, the state should begin its privatization efforts by turning clowns like McKernan and Silkman over to the private sector.

Mark's redux: in praise of diverse ads

■ By Bob Higgins

For the past several months, readers of Casco Bay Weekly have been writing letters to the editor to complain about the advertisements for Mark's Show Place, as well as those for Video Expo.

At first the letters were slightly condescending, as if to explain to us simple-minded readers that these atrocities were degrading to women, caused rape and incest, as well as other sundry and various forms of debauchery found in Maine and other places in the country. But over a period of months, the letters have changed to a more threatening tone. Advertisers are threatening to pull their ads unless Monte Paulsen and Dodge Morgan cave in to this pressure.

Let's take a step back and look at the big picture here, folks. While perusing the pages of the latest issue of Casco Bay Weekly, I found at least 30 ads that were offensive to me in one way or another. I have a two-tiered approach to these ads. First, I shake my head and wonder what this country is coming to, and second, I don't patronize that particular advertiser.

By allowing this discussion to continue over the past few months, Paulsen has accomplished what every newspaper editor has wished for since Ben Franklin started publishing Poor Richard's Almanac. His readers are actually reading the ads! Issue after issue, some reader writes of this horrible atrocity against women, or this latest challenge to the First Amendment. I'm sure Morgan gleefully cashes the checks of the advertisers each week, pointing out to all the prospective advertisers positive proof that people actually do read the ads. This, I'm sure, gives the Portland Press Herald a case of night sweats.

Furthermore, take a close look at the competition. They also run ads for the same companies. By threatening to pull advertisements or boycott CBW, you leave yourself open to no newspaper at all.

Humans are, by nature, a very diverse and individual species. Opinions differ from one to another, even among brothers and sisters raised in the same environment. I personally am a libertarian with some conservative opinions, a lover of Grateful Dead music and a longtime fan of the National Rifle Association. Just because a man or woman does not believe in the same things that you do does not make them wrong or right, just different.

It is wrong to pressure an individual or group into believing what you want them to. In today's national press, this is called being "politically correct." In my book, it stifles human creativity and the ability to read, learn and believe in what you want. If we all agreed on every little thing, we would soon be a nation of lemmings.

Casco Bay Weekly was started to serve a niche in the community that Paulsen and others thought was starving for literate meandering on any subject under the sun. They felt that Portland was quickly becoming a one-horse town in a literary sense, and that that old horse was simply parading down the same tired old route each day. In the Press Herald, we are subjected to articles on how disgusting the new library looks, or how Portland is the "San Francisco of the East Coast." I like to read CBW because it is not afraid to poke fun at such ideas. Aside from a few over-ramped articles on trains, the paper is a good alternative.

The question I pose to readers is this: Do you want an alternative newspaper that will cave in to any group of citizens that comes along? Do you really want a paper that, if its readers find something offensive, apologizes profusely and never accepts money from advertisers again? Do you want a shill of the little interest group to write each week and tell you what is correct to think? I doubt it.

The average reader of CBW has a brain, and is capable of having a few rational opinions of her or his own. Remember, unless an advertiser spends that dollar, you won't get to read Ernie Pook, Al Diamon, Weird News, Personals or the Calendar. All the diversity that makes this paper will be gone, and you'll be left with the bland shell that once was a good news weekly.

Until you can accept what you disagree with, you will remain intellectually crippled. Long live diverse ads.

The True story

Congratulations to Mishe Pietkiewicz on the excellent article about sexual harassment ("Old rituals, new challenges," 7.2.92). However, the sidebar piece that listed some of the training options available was incorrect in the listing of Eleanor True of Sterling Management Support. Ms. True provides companies with employee and supervisory training. A one-hour session costs $165, with an additional fee of $55 per hour for longer sessions.

During the supervisory training, Ms. True utilizes a videotape that she helped produce. "The Maine Workplace: Sexual Harassment Training for Employees" was produced in Maine by Maine business people, and is the only videotape available that is open captioned, shows examples of harassment and is 12 minutes long. This video costs $245 and does come with a poster, a users' guide and sample written material as you mentioned.

By purchasing a video that complies with Maine law, companies can train all employees immediately and each employee as he or she is hired. This helps reinforce the message that sexual harassment is not allowed.

Ms. Pietkiewicz's article correctly mentioned the concerns that many business owners and managers have about the new education law. Hiring consultants each year to train new employees and supervisors can be very costly, particularly for smaller businesses.

We believe that this videotape can relieve part of that burden. Most importantly, it clearly depicts sexual harassment, educates employees about the law and shows them how to deal with the problems in-house whenever possible. By making the required education available at a relatively low cost, we believe we are giving Maine businesses and employees a better chance to achieve, as your editorial stated, "a cultural climate where such laws are no longer necessary."

Its a problem

Hate to bring it up, but CBW once again succumbed to the too-common grammatical error of confusing the contraction "it's" (it is) with the possessive "its." I refer to

Not so, however, with the bronze plaque on the side of Portland's 1807 Observatory, which proclaims for all to see: "Lighting of the Portland Observatory. ### Ask teachers

Before concluding that "it's hard to find anyone critical of Senate District 32 candidate Jane Amaro's work in state education" ("Reasons to vote on June 9," 6.4.92), did you ask any teachers what they thought?

That's a decision-making procedure that has often characterized legislation opposed by the State Board of Education with Jane Amaro at the helm. One example is their opposition to The Bill To Establish a Professional Standards Board for Certification for Teachers, L.D. 1902, favored by many teachers, approved by both bodies of the Legislature, opposed by the state board and now sitting on the governor's desk, awaiting possible veto.

Passage of the bill would correct a gross inequality in the rule-making process for teacher certification by creating a self-supporting 13-member board (including seven practicing teachers). State policy mandates that a majority of members on the licensing boards of over 40 other professions (including clinical psychology and cosmetology) be actively licensed professionals practicing in their field.

Not so for teachers. The state Department of Education and Board of Education decide for teachers; gubernatorial appointment is the only requirement for board membership. It has been over 20 years since the current members of the State Board of Education have been actively practicing public school teachers.

Educational reform efforts say that improvement of public education in this country is tied to genuine reliance on teachers in decisions that effect the work they do. We now have a top-down hierarchical process, which in this state keeps about 14,000 teachers (mostly female) as the final recipients of a tall pile of answers that the various "bosses" have decided are good for them. I hope CBW takes the bold, egalitarian step of asking teachers what's happening in education before deciding who's good for education.

Don't buy wolf-hybrids

Beware of breeders who are attempting to sell wolf-hybrids, enticing you with the "call of the wild." These breeders are responsible for numerous human tragedies as well as the suffering and loneliness of an intelligent wild animal that should remain free.

Three hundred years ago our ancestors tortured and systematically eradicated this marvelous predator from most parts of the United States. Today the wolf suffers from another abuse — breeders of wolf-hybrids. They do the wolf great harm by taking away its freedom and separating it from its pack — so that it can mate with a domestic dog. Have we not done enough to the wolf?

According to the Humane Society of the United States, wolf-hybrids cannot live as wild animals and their size, strength and often unstable temperament make them generally unsuitable for life as companion animals. They are frequently unpredictable, destructive, rarely trainable and are very adept at escaping from confinement. Many are hit by cars or killed attacking livestock or pets. Many are forced to live out their lives chained or confined in basements or small cages — or taken to shelters where they are killed.

Although there are no documented accounts of fatal attacks by healthy wild wolves in North America, severe and fatal attacks by wolf-hybrids have been disturbingly common. At least seven children have been killed by pet wolf-hybrids since 1986. Several severe maulings in 1991 led many communities to seek restrictions on these animals.

If you are interested in the wolf and wish for its continued presence with us — don't buy wolf-hybrids. Instead support groups that are working to protect the wolf in the wild.

GOOD COOKIN' KATAHDIN

The next time you're in town to take in a show, drop in afterwards and have something for the ride home. Katahdin serves a variety of appetizers, salads, pastas, and desserts that are perfect for late night dining. John is now making Key Lime Pie, Raspberry Peach Cobbler, Chocolate Pudding Cake, Strawberry Shortcake, and Peanut Butter Pie. You can also enjoy some of Gretchen's Chocolate Mint Ice Cream, Orange Pineapple Sherbet, or Peach Frozen yogurt. We're open until eleven on Friday and Saturday, so come in for some refreshment.

We keep our prices low so that people can come in and enjoy our Good Cookin' without straining their budgets. One of our best deals is the Blue Plate Special. For just $9.95 you get a full dinner served with buttermilk biscuits, Aunt Nina's pickles, a garden salad, and a cup of soup. Recent Blue Plates have been Braised Lamb Shanks in red wine, rosemary & garlic, Chicken Pot Pie, Braised Pork Chops with chutney gravy, and Meatloaf. We also offer lower prices for children.

Some of our most enjoyable times here in the kitchen are when we receive nice fresh fish and have to figure out how we want to prepare it for you that evening. The swordfish has been particularly good this season, and we have come up with a Grilled Swordfish with Raspberry Chambord Sauce that has been very popular with our customers. We've also been getting in some excellent scallops to use in our Grilled Sea Scallops with spicy lime and vegetable vinaigrette - a regular menu item.

So make the most of being by the ocean and try the delicious and innovative ways we prepare fish and other seafood. You'll have one more reason to be glad you're in Portland.

SILVER SCREEN

A League of Their Own

In 1943, all the baseball-playing men were at war overseas and women were given their chance to play professional ball. Penny Marshall directs this comedy about the All-American Girls Professional Baseball League. Starring Geena Davis, Lori Petty, Tom Hanks and Madonna.

Alien 3

Ripley awakes after crash-landing on a desolate world where she is the only female on the all-male prison planet — well, almost the only female. The slow-walking slugs through most of the cast en route to a showdown with Sigourney Weaver that will make "Alien 4" very difficult to write.

American Dream

In 1984, the Hormel Company declared a $29 million profit, yet cut meatpacker wages in Austin, Minn., by more than half. When the parent union failed to act aggressively, the local union went out on strike. Barbara Kopple documents the battle between management and strikers, also focusing on the battle between the local and the parent union, which turned worker against worker and brother against brother.

Basic Instinct

"Streets of San Francisco's" Michael Douglas finally returns as a detective in this erotic murder thriller directed by Paul Verhoeven ("Total Recall"), also starring Sharon Stone. Slick, entertaining, homophobic.

Batman Returns

Batman (Michael Keaton) returns to battle the combined forces of the Penguin (Danny DeVito), an evil industrialist (Christopher Walken), and the Catwoman (Michelle Pfeiffer). Directed by Tim Burton. Lotsa action can't mask the lack of a cohesive plot.

Beethoven

Suburban parents of three, played by Charles Grodin and Bonnie Hunt, have to deal with a St. Bernard that joins and disrupts their household. Thought-provoking.

Boomerang

Eddie Murphy stars as a womanizer who changes his ways when he falls in love with another exec at his company (Robin Givens) who's as hardboiled and professionally driven as he — and as unattainable romantically. Features Halle Berry and Grace Jones. Directed by Reginald Hudlin ("House Party").

Cool World

Director Ralph Bakshi combines live action and animation in this modern mystery about a cartoonist (Gabriel Byrne) who finds himself pulled into the fantasy world he's created. Kim Basinger plays an animated seductress who, like Pinocchio, only wants to be real.

Encino Man

Two unpopular teenage boys unearth and thaw a frozen Neanderthal man. They enroll him in school as a foreign exchange student, thereby gaining unexpected popularity.

Fer and Away

A turn-of-the-century Irish laborer endures hardship in Eire, then in an unlikely turn of events, flees Ireland with the well-to-do daughter of the rich landlord who oppressed his family and falls in love with her in America. Starring Tom Cruise and Nicole Kidman.

Fern Gully

A fairy from the Fern Gully rainforest meets a human and together they try to stop the ecological destruction that threatens the fairy's home.

Fried Green Tomatoes

An overweight and neglected housewife befriends a lonely older woman living in a rest home. They develop a close friendship as the older woman spins a tale about two intimate female friends in the '30s. Her story helps restore the housewife's joie de vivre. Stars Jessica Tandy, Kathy Bates, Mary Stuart Masterson and Mary Louise Parker.

Howards End

In this adaptation of E.M. Forster's novel, the clash between different segments of early 20th-century British society is reflected in the relationships between the bohemian Schlegel sisters and the conventional Wilcox family. Stars Vanessa Redgrave, Anthony Hopkins, Emma Thompson and Helena Bonham-Carter.

Housesitter

Goldie Hawn plays a con artist who has a one-night stand with an architect (Steve Martin), moves into the man's home and pretends to be his wife while trying to win his heart.

Lethal Weapon III

Yet another encore for the hardcore. Murtaugh has plans to retire but can't help being sucked into one last free-for-all case — this time involving stolen firearms from the police department — with partner Riggs. Stars Danny Glover and Mel Gibson.

Mediterranean

Early in World War II, an oddball contingent of Italian soldiers arrives on a Greek island with a mission to guard it for Mussolini. The Greek men have been taken prisoner, so the soldiers find themselves in something akin to paradise — a beautiful island village inhabited only by welcoming women, children and a priest.

My Cousin Vinny

Joe Pesci plays the inept Brooklyn lawyer who comes to the rescue of his cousin and a friend (Ralph Macchio and Mitchell Whitfield), college students wrongly accused of murder in a rural Alabama town. With a deliciously tawdry performance by Marisa Tomei as Pesci's body-suit-clad girlfriend, and a great cameo by Fred Gwynne.

Patriot Games

Harrison Ford steps in for Alec Baldwin as CIA analyst Jack Ryan in this sequel to "The Hunt for Red October." International terrorists and an IRA splinter group target Ryan and his family after Ryan foils their attempt to kidnap a member of England's royal family. Also featuring Anne Archer as Ryan's wife and Thom Borch as their daughter.

Pinocchio

Disney's animated classic about a wooden puppet who must prove himself worthy of being a real boy.

The Playboys

A young woman living in a small town in Ireland elicits local disapproval when she has an illegitimate child and refuses to name the father. She then further elicits local sensibilities when she falls in love with a member of a traveling actors' troupe. Starring Albert Finney and Aidan Quinn.

Prelude to a Kiss

Meg Ryan and Alec Baldwin play newlyweds whose lives are dramatically altered by an uninvited guest at their wedding reception. When the guest, a terminally ill old man, kisses the bride, his soul switches places with hers, challenging the bridegroom's unconditional love for his new wife. Also features Kathy Bates, Patty Duke and Ned Beatty.

Ruby

So who didn't kill JFK? Small-time Dallas hood and presidential avenger Jack Ruby (Danny Aiello) befriends and tries to help a battered wife (Sherilyn Fenn of "Twin Peaks"), who moves from a job as a dancer at his club to Vegas and thence to an inner sanctum of the Capitol. When she returns to Ruby, both of them wind up in the middle of an intricate Mafia-Cuban-CIA plot to kill the president.

Sister Act

A trashy lounge singer (Whoopi Goldberg) goes into hiding in a convent after witnessing a murder. She takes over the choir and transmutes them into superb jazz singers, thereby attracting the attention of the thugs involved in the murder.

Sleepwalkers

Extraterrestrial vampires terrorize a small town in East town, always maintaining their respectability with their assumed human forms.

Universal Soldier

A reporter discovers a secret government experiment to create the ultimate fighting machine, genetically engineered soldiers made from dead GIs. But a flaw in the programming of the six prototypes enables them to break free from their masters. In the ensuing battle, one (Jean-Claude Van Damme) struggles to regain his lost humanity while subduing his rampaging companions and protecting the reporter. Also starring Dolph Lundgren.

Unlawful Entry

After a young couple's home is vandalized, the police officer assigned to their case begins to terrorize them. Starring Kurt Russell, Madeline Stowe and Ray Liotta, who does a nasty turn as the cop.

Wayne's World

Metal Heads Wayne and Garth (of "Saturday Night Live") make pronouncements on teen life and share fantasies about the lovely babes from Babylon. Moronic.

White Men Can't Jump

A comedy-drama in which Wesley Snipes ("Judge Dredd") and Woody Harrison (TV's "Cheers") team up to make money scamming other basketball players on LA's playgrounds. Great dialogue. Great basketball.

"Turkey Lane," oil on canvas, 35" x 48", 1988.

What do Leonardo da Vinci, Jaime Huguet, Antonello de Messina, Grandma Moses and Grant Wood have in common?

Brett Bigbee, Renaissance man

On June 29 The Museum of Art of Ogunquit opened its 1992 Summer Exhibition. Of the three artists featured, Brett Bigbee's work was by far the most riveting. To talk about Bigbee is merely an assignment in discussing art history — just about all of it. He seems to have internalized it all, and what he leaves out of his paintings he leaves out by conscious exclusion.

The categorization of Brett Bigbee goes something like this: He's a neo-Platonist Photorealist Flemish/Italian Renaissance American Gothic painter. And damned good at it, too. Bigbee's style is loosely based on that of Leonardo da Vinci, Jaime Huguet (who was actually a Catalan, so we have to add that to the list of schools), Antonello de Messina (a Florentine quattrocento painter with an instinct for geometry and flatness of plane), Grandma Moses and Grant Wood.

Bigbee is a neo-Platonist in the sense that his work is the synthesis of pure ideas — pure artistic ideas and pure ideas of specific things (chair, leaf, woman, landscape). He is a consummate technician. He realizes his ideas deliberately and painstakingly. He begins a work with a pencil sketch of his subject. With analytical detachment Bigbee observes his subject in minute detail, giving each detail equal importance. He then draws with a formal adherence to the linear component of his composition and to verisimilitude. Finally, he dramatically heightens his composition by the creation of pure light. It's breathtaking.

It is this sense of formality that makes Bigbee a Renaissance painter. In her seated pose in "Ann with Plant," his model gazes without expression from the canvas, lending no personal interpretation to the painting. In other paintings her eyes are closed in sleep, further keeping her, as a person, a secret. In this formal inscrutability she is like a Florentine portrait. Her form is firmly defined and sculpted by the light. She is a mystical creature, but not without eroticism. There is passion in her bodily attitudes; and the fact that in her seated portrait she is wearing socks dispels the detached formality of the pure composition and makes her a vulnerable, knowable woman. Bigbee creates an interesting emotional balance by this unexpected and subtle nose-thumbing at formality.

"Still Life," oil on canvas, 13" x 17", 1989.

He also does interesting things compositionally. Against all the lessons of art school teachers, Bigbee divides the canvas of "Ann with Plant" into quadrants. Then he does a couple of weird things: He cuts his model off at the feet, as well as cutting off the edges of a chair. And he fills the right side of the canvas with a chair and plant that are essentially meaningless. But the strength of the still, luminescent figure is so powerful that it pulls everything over to the left side, and it winds up working.

Similarly, in "Sleeper" and "Nude," two portraits of a sleeping woman, Bigbee cuts the canvas in half horizontally, again against all conventional wisdom. Again, in both cases, it works. "Nude," especially, is like a jazz piece. Just as it's on the verge of being pretentious in its formal, geometric composition, Bigbee paints a red drapery on the left edge of the canvas. There are contours in the drapery, as there are in the figure and the sheets on which she's lying. There are now contours everywhere except in the busy, decorative wallpaper pattern above her. With the addition of that third contour, the picture becomes round, making the whole painting roll in on the figure, riveting the viewer.

The American Gothic component of Bigbee's work derives from his attention to minute detail, to flat planes, uniform light and elongated, stylized figures set against ordinary backgrounds with components of primitivism. His figures and his landscapes are both ancient and modern.

These commanding, luminescent paintings are still and serene, and they demand nothing of the viewer except sheer admiration.

How to respond to a personal ad:

Just call 1-900-370-2041 any time, 24 hours a day, from any touch-tone phone! Enter the four-digit # number of the ad you wish to respond to, listen to the greeting, then leave a response. (An advertiser may not have recorded a greeting by the time you call. You may still leave a message on that person's line.) The date at the end of the ad is the last day to reply to that ad. You may also choose to "browse" through all ads in a specific category (companions and others not available to "browse"). Calls cost $1.49/min. You must be 18 or over.

To respond to a CBW Box #, address mail to Casco Bay Weekly, 551A Congress St., Portland, ME 04101, making sure to print the three-digit CBW Box # clearly in the lower left-hand corner of the envelope.

How to place your personal ad:

To place a FREE ad with Personal Call®, fill out the coupon and mail or FAX it (775-1615) to us. (If faxing, please photocopy the coupon first and then fax it. The newspaper doesn't reproduce well.) The deadline for receiving personal ads is Monday at noon. FREE ads are 25 words or less and run for two weeks. No free ads will be accepted over the phone. Ads with more than 25 words cost 50¢ per additional word. We'll send you a four-digit # number (to be printed in your ad) and a six-digit security code for exclusive access to your responses through an 800-line at no cost to the you.

CBW Box #s and P.O. Box #s cost $20 per two-week ad. Ads may be paid for with Visa or MasterCard, or local check or cash.

How to use your Personal Call® mailbox:

After you receive your # number and private security code, you may record your personal introduction. Use your introduction to tell more about yourself than your ad does. Give your first name, but DON'T give your last name, phone number or address. Make sure you ask your callers to leave their names, phone numbers and the best times to call them. All introductions are reviewed by CBW and go on line within 24 hours.
